A little background from Wikipedia on the term: Human Capital—

“The use of this term ...dates back to Jacob Mincer's article from the Journal of Political Economy, 1958 "Investment in Human Capital and Personal Income Distribution" The best-known application of the idea of "human capital" in economics is that of Mincer and Gary Becker of the "Chicago School" of economics. Becker's book entitled Human Capital, published in 1964, became a standard reference for many years. In this view, human capital is similar to "physical means of production", e.g., factories and machines: one can invest in human capital (via education, training, medical treatment) and one's outputs depend partly on the rate of return on the human capital one owns.

Thus, human capital is a means of production, into which additional investment yields additional output.

Human Capital is substitutable, but not transferable like land, labor, or fixed capital.
